Register of the Racine Street Project Collection
Collection 329
Introduction

The Racine Street Project begun in the late 1970s, by the Lake Region Conference (LRC) under the leadership of Dr. Charles D. Joseph, was located at the intersection of Racine and 76th Street in Chicago. The project's goals were to provide low-income housing for senior citizen church members, a school for the Shiloh Seventh-day Adventist Church, and a shopping plaza. The shopping plaza was to produce income to sustain the other two endeavors.

In the late 1970s, the LRC was in good financial standing. However, they still lacked funds to provide their constituents with important services such as suitable housing for the elderly and Adventist education for the youth. This led to the decision by the LRC Executive Committee to proceed with this project. The LRC leadership told the members of the Conference that this land would indeed be used for housing, a school, and shopping center. Further, they led the membership to believe this would be paid for by the government and not by the Conference. In 1977, the LRC Executive Committee voted to form a separate non-profit corporation called Full Life, Inc. (Full Life) to shield the LRC from liability while maintaining the same leadership in both organizations.

The Racine Street site consisted of four parcels of land that originally were to be developed into three housing buildings and the Shiloh Academy. The plan was later changed to be two housing buildings, the Shiloh Academy, and a commercial building. Loyola University was the owner of these four parcels of land. Talks began to acquire the land from them. After several failed attempts, Full Life entered into several partnerships with various groups to enable Full Life to acquire the funding needed to buy the properties. These partnerships caused a relatively simple project by the LRC to transform into a complex one with several other parties involved, some of whom were not connected to the Adventist church.

Due to the financial drain on the LRC brought on by this project, by the early 1980s the Conference was behind in its tithe and offering remittance to the Lake Union. This caused the Union to become concerned for the stability of the LRC. Additionally, early 1986, the Union became aware that the Shiloh Seventh-day Adventist Church had been recently mortgaged to raise funds without the consent of the LRC Executive Committee or the Shiloh Church members. In light of these and other information, the Lake Union and the North American Division of Seventh-day Adventists opened a formal investigation into the affairs and dealings of the LRC.

In 1986 the North American Division requested special counsel to present a report of the North American Division Survey of the Lake Region Conference. After delays from the LRC, a meeting was finally held on February 8, 1987, at Kellogg Memorial Auditorium in Battle Creek, Michigan to share the investigation and report to the constituents of the LRC. The report found that the leadership of the LRC failed to follow church policy and committed fraud in the process of building this project. Elders Charles D. Joseph and R. C. Brown, Sr., were requested to resign.

The following years were spent fixing the financial and legal issues that were made during the Racine Street Project. There were also issues within the church itself that needed to be addressed from the new administration in the LRC and the Lake Union.

In the end, a shopping plaza was eventually built but apparently went bankrupt fairly soon; some apartments were built by one of the partners, but the leader of that project ended up in jail for fraud; and the Shiloh Academy was not built.

Scope and Content

This collection documents the Racine Street Project of the Lake Region Conference through a collection of various legal and financial documents, newspaper clippings, and the report prepared by the North American Division. Included also are some correspondence from church leaders as well as concerned lay members and minutes that pertain to this project.

The collection begins in 1977, but the majority of the construction and subsequent investigation of the project is from 1980-1987. The years after 1988 deal with the aftermath and corresponding consequences to the Racine Street Project.

Arrangement

This collection is in chronological order from the preparations (late 1970s to early 1980s) to the involvement of the Lake Union and General Conference (mid 1980s) until the corresponding aftermaths that ended in the early 1990s. The donor, Vern Alger, arranged this collection by a mix of events and dates which were meaningful to one working on the case. However, the Center for Adventist Research felt access would be best if the collection were in chronological order. This will help the researcher progress step by step through the developing project and the subsequent results.

The itemization in the following register is rather brief. We felt a detailed listing would take a long time to compile, we may not describe some technical documents correctly, and it would be very tedious for anyone to work through. Therefore, we employed several general terms detailed below. Anyone working through this collection should find these descriptive enough within the chronological framework to find the general area they wish to see.

Construction Documents are those which had to do with the acquiring and building of the Racine Street Project. The Crane Construction Company was the main company the project used. There are also documents from the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development.
Bank Documents are those from the banks that were used to acquire loans for the project. The banks involved are: Independence Bank of Chicago, Continental Bank, Lloyds Bank, and American National Bank.

Financial Documents are either the financial plans of the project or the various financial information from the LRC.

Partnership Agreements are the documents of the various partnerships that were formed between the LRC with other entities. The partners include: Full Life, Inc., Urban Services Realty, South Shore Ltd., Neighborhood Fund, Continental Plaza Associates, Continental Commercial Partners, and LSM Venture Associates.

Mortgage Documents are the documents of the land and building mortgages from the banks.

North American Division Survey Documents are the documents which were used for the investigation that was conducted by the North American Division on the actions of the LRC.

North American Division Survey Report Meeting are the documents that dealt with the meeting that the North American Division held for the constituents of the LRC to discuss the findings of their investigation.

Provenance

Vernon L. Alger was a lawyer, employed by the Lake Union Conference and also working for the North American Division of Seventh-day Adventists, and assigned to the Racine Street Project case. He donated this collection to the Center for Adventist Research in November 2014.
